

R: Your name?

K: Sir Keir Starmer. But can I say that the appellation of “Sir” is both unnecessary and...

R: Occupation?

K: Prime minister.

R: Wrong. Laughing stock. Your specialist subject?

K: Being an effective leader.

R: Mr. Starmer, your time starts now. What’s the best immigration policy?

K: Great question, but I’ll answer with a question. What’s an “immigration policy”? I genuinely don’t know.

R: Next Question. How do you feel about Nigel Farage going up the polls?

K: I believe that Nigel Farage has every right to win the 2026 Eurovision Song Contest.

R: That was not the question. Moving on. How do you make Labour an effective party?

K: Degrade it so much that it’s unelectable and let Nigel Farage run the country.

R: As prime minister, what are your plans on reforming the economy?

K: Pass.

R: As prime minister, what are your plans on reforming the National Security?

K: Pass.

R: Between you and a broken microwave, who do you think has better judgement of the UK’s current crises?

K: 100% the microwave.

R: How could the British Government be taken seriously?

K: Resurrect Margaret Thatcher, appoint her Reich-Chancellor, give her the appellation of “Führer”, let her write a book called “Mine Shaft” and allow her to lead us in total war.

R: Time’s up. Sir Keir Starmer, you’ve scored -102 points, just behind Nigel Farage and just in front of David Cameron.

K: Pass.
